Dear Body, I just realized I haven't appreciated you enough for what you have done through all of these Tahuns. I want to say thank you and I love you. You're the most precious thing I could have. Without you my organs would not have a home to live in and I would look as disgusting as I could be. Without you I would be thin air floating restlessly in the universe while my mind would be a wanderer without any direction and the word "tangible" would be just a dream. We have a lifetime together.

In my series Untangle Me, I use the everyday image of tangled earphone cords as a metaphor for the psychological knots formed by perfectionism, anxiety, and overthinking. Despite being repeatedly unraveled, cords always find a way to twist back into themselves—mirroring how my thoughts loop in the relentless pursuit of an ever-shifting, subjective standard of "perfection" in art and in life. As artists, we often hold ourselves to high personal standards while existing within a world that constantly evaluates us through external, and often unfair, lenses.

This personal entanglement is not isolated—it echoes the broader, socio-environmental entanglements faced by women in urban Jakarta. Just as the cords coil into themselves, women's lives are shaped by intersecting pressures, specifically social marginalization, gendered expectations, and economic precarity. Our bodies and minds become sites of quiet tension, expected to hold it all together.

The process of making art becomes my act of therapeutic unraveling. Each detail is a step in untangling the mental chaos. It is a small, intimate resistance to the demand for control and composure—a resistance grounded in care and imperfection.

Invisible Red invites viewers to pause and reflect on the hidden complexities beneath our everyday lives. Through the metaphor of earphones, it reclaims a mundane object as a symbol of our shared mental and emotional burdens—especially those carried by women who sustain life under pressure.

The sky stretches endlessly, a soft and serene blue that seems to cradle the world in its stillness. Beneath it, a young girl stands, her figure small and solitary against the vastness. Her shoulders slump ever so slightly, as if carrying a weight invisible to the eye but palpable in its presence.

The simplicity of the scene feels deliberate, as though the world has quieted itself to listen to her silence. The emptiness around her mirrors the hollow ache she holds inside—a void she cannot name but feels deeply.

Her downcast eyes speak of something unresolved, a story left untold, suspended in the space between heartbeats. The brightness of the sky only sharpens the contrast, highlighting the heaviness that lingers within her. It's a moment suspended in time, fragile and aching, where the lightness of the world seems to wait patiently for her to breathe.

This painting is a quiet celebration of inner strength and self-expression. A woman in a yellow dress holds a red anthurium close to her face, as if speaking through it. The flower becomes her language—bold where her voice feels hesitant, passionate where her heart longs to be heard.

The red anthurium, a symbol of admiration, love, and passion, mirrors what words often cannot capture. It stands for the fire within softness, the courage that exists even in silence. For women who find their voices in drawings, poems, gestures, and quiet acts, this is empowerment: not conforming to how strength is expected to look, but choosing to express it authentically.

Sometimes, power is not in saying everything aloud—it's in finding your own way to let the world know what you feel.

Like the unfolding of a fan, this work reveals the figure of a witch in flight, a symbol of resilience and defiance. Witches, often misunderstood, symbolize women's power: free, unbound, and unafraid. Created in response to the helplessness I sometimes feel as a woman, this piece reminds me that women are in fact deeply powerful, essential to the fabric of society, and capable of reshaping the world when they embrace their strength.

Rp30.000.000

In this painting, I sought to convey the tranquility and strength that emanate from within when one achieves a state of inner clarity and balance. The imagery of a hidden temple symbolizes the deep, often overlooked aspects of our identity that require introspection and mindfulness to uncover. It is a reminder that beneath the surface lies a reservoir of strength and serenity, waiting to be tapped into. The process of cleansing is both a ritual and a journey. It involves shedding the layers of negativity, doubt, and external influences that cloud our true essence. In doing so, we allow our inner light to shine through, establishing a space where our authentic self can reign and thrive.

Through "Body of The Hidden Temple," I invite viewers to embark on their own journey of self-discovery and purification. It is an ode to the strength and resilience that lies within us all, urging us to honor and uphold the sanctity of our inner temples. In doing so, we create a foundation upon which we can build a life of fulfillment and peace.

This painting reflects a moment of solitude and introspection. The central figure, wrapped in a multi colored cloak, represents the emotional complexity of being alone not as isolation, but as a space for inner clarity and connection to something larger. The colors suggest a range of feelings: calm, longing, and quiet strength. The glowing ring and celestial body in the background evoke a sense of cosmic presence. They're not just decorative, they symbolize the idea that even in solitude, we are part of something expansive and meaningful.

The figure's gesture is gentle and open, suggesting vulnerability and readiness to receive. I created this piece to explore how solitude can be both grounding and transformative. It's about finding peace in stillness, and recognizing that even when we feel lonesome, we are never truly disconnected.

There are nights when the wolves are silent and only the moon howls. The moon will guide you through the night with her brightness, but she will always dwell in the darkness, in order to be seen. It is a reminder that even in our darkest moments, there is always hope for the future as the moon always comes back around. The moon is a constant companion, and its phases remind us of the cycle of life.

There is a side of the Moon which we never see, but that hidden half is as potent a factor in causing the ebb and flow of the Earth's tide as the part of the Moon which is visible. As the tides of life rise and fall, life is constant, like the waves crashing upon the shore. Persistence is the key in high and low times.

“Flow of Hope” presents an abstract landscape composed of splashes and streams of pastel neon hues — pink, green, and purple — moving organically across the canvas. The rhythm of brushstrokes and paint drips creates the impression of unceasing energy, suggesting the continuity of life that never stops flowing.

Amid these fluid gestures, the form of the higanbana flower emerges as a symbolic marker. In this work, the higanbana is not portrayed as a symbol of parting, but as a metaphor for resilience, transformation, and the courage of women as they navigate life’s challenging transitions.

Through a vibrant and gestural visual language, the artwork articulates optimism and strength. “Flow of Hope” becomes an embodiment of hope in constant motion, and a reminder that from every vulnerability, new strength can be born.

This work presents an organic form with a hollow within it, serving as a metaphor for a mother's space of love — a place of protection, a place of return, and a space of unconditional acceptance. The rounded, gentle silhouette emphasizes warmth and an infinite emotional embrace, portraying the mother as a vessel that continually gives, nurtures, and sacrifices.

The calming gradations of color reflect inner softness and emotional stability in facing life's dynamics. The hollow at the center is not merely an emptiness, but a representation of spacious inner being — a place where all emotions, from sorrow to joy, can be received without rejection.

Its smooth surface evokes an impression of outward tranquility, while hinting at the hidden depths of inner labor. In this way, the work positions the figure of the mother as an entity that is always present, even in silence.

This dense, enclosing biomorphic form conveys the impression of a protective figure — a shield guarding against the outside world. The work represents the father as a quiet guardian: his presence may not always appear active, yet he is always there when needed.

The flowing yet massive gestures affirm the father's role as a support in life — a figure who may not express himself verbally, but whose presence carries great strength. Its smooth, gleaming surface reflects how a father's role often goes unnoticed, though it is crucial in sustaining daily life.

In contrast, the rough texture at the top suggests the weight of responsibility silently carried, including hidden inner wounds. The sheen enveloping the surface underscores this duality: outward solidity paired with inner vulnerability. "Protector in Silence" is a tribute to the quiet strength that upholds the continuity of life.
